Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The County Agent and the Farm Bureau The present system of American agricultural education in its various forms is the result, broadly speaking, of the application of science to practice. For a long period, the field of this scientific agriculture was almost wholly that of production. Special students of agriculture were endeavoring to discover the laws of plant and animal growth and the interrelations of soil, climate, and plant. More recently, efforts are being made to work out in the same fashion the laws of economic and social development. Thus, the field of scientific agriculture has broadened to include all the interests of farmers and their communities. A remarkable development of this broadened field of agriculture has been the recent extension of agricultural education. Teachers in the agricultural colleges at first gave their efforts largely to the teaching of resident students. Then gradually the professors began to go out to talk to the farmers. After a while came the Farmers Institutes, where working farmers and agricultural specialists joined forces in a program of instruction and discussion. The Act of Congress, known as the Smith-Lever Act, passed in 1914 opened on a national basis a wonderful chapter in agricultural extension service, and the County Agent became the clearing house of information and suggestion between the working farmer and the educational institutions.
