Not illustrated. 1907 Excerpt: .Children have such vivid imaginations that they are capable of becoming frightened by their own pictures. When they become interested in a story, it is difficult, even in the kindergarten, to check their flow of suggested ideas; conversations among them are as natural as among adults; developing instruction is based on the assumption that their experiences are rich enough to allow contributions of thought continually; and fables, calling for interpretation, are especially written for them. Here, then, are the beginnings of a third ability of great importance, i. e., the power to supplement an author s thought. The best of authors fail to put most of their ideas into print. Or, as Buskin declares, all literature--like the story of the Prodigal Son--appears practically in the form of parables requiring much supplementing to be properly pictured and interpreted. The words in a minister s text in comparison with those in his sermon are perhaps as one to one hundred. The statements in any text should bear a similar ratio to the thoughts that they suggest in the reader s mind. Accordingly, much time should be occupied by children in school in visualizing in greater detail the scenes in geography, history, and other studies; the bearings of facts upon human life should often be traced out with care; and comparisons of many kinds should be instituted. To this end fact questions, testing mainly memory, are out of place; questions involving re/7ecfton should be-mmon, if we desire young people...
