The term casehardening, by itself, implies the hardening of the surface or skin of an article, and in order to fully understand the process and its object, it is necessary to briefly consider the facts and laws upon which it is founded. Carbon has a very great affinity for iron and combines with it at all temperatures above a faint red heat. Advantage was taken of this fact in the production of steel by cementation, an old process which consisted of rolling wrought iron into thin strips and then placing these in boxes with some material containing a fair proportion of carbon. These boxes were then heated to a very high temperature and the carbon was gradually absorbed by the iron. The process of casehardening is, in fact, only an improvement on this old cementation process used in times past for making steel from wrought iron. The steel is heated in packing boxes in the presence of a carbonaceous material and when the surface of the steel has absorbed enough carbon so that it will harden the same as high-carbon steel, it can be quenched in oil or water, according to the requirements. For many purposes, in machine work, articles are required which must have a perfectly hard surface and yet...
